Questions And Answers

Larry Arnold

Q: Your membership application ask for a digital signature. How do I produce one? I have never been ask for that before and therefore have no knowledge as to how dot obtain one. I would like to have a membership and also the legal protection plan which your web site offers.

A: A digital signature isn't a real write-your-name autograph. Usually it consists of checking a box or entering information in a field. It's on the form, down at the bottom.

Q: I was in Austin recently. We saw something very odd, as the city had a sign in the bus that read as follows: "WEAPONS PROHIBITED ON PREMISES", in Spanish it read; "PROHIBIDAS LAS ARMAS EN ESTA LOCAL."

Recently the State of Texas granted me a CHL and I am a new member of the association. I am not an attorney, but I have been involved with aviation regulations and law for over 45 years as a pilot, instructor, and at one time an FAA official. With that thin background dealing with law and regulations, please allow a few comments.

First, a search of a of a common dictionary and a law dictionary reveals no instance where a vehicle is referred to as a "premises." Since language matters, I am not sure that there is any chance a judge would consider their sign valid on that point alone.

Second, from what I remember in my classes for CHL, the signs prohibiting a CHL from carrying anywhere requires specific signage specified by the Texas Laws. It does not appear that the signs in the bus meet that criteria, but I could be wrong.

Third, it was my understanding that public transportation, excepting the airlines, could not bar CHL.

Fourth, it seems darned strange that the very city that houses our state government would be denying Texans their 2nd amendment rights.

Can you refer me to someone who can answer/speak to my comments? My research of the law has not shown me that the city of Austin is correct.

A: Anyone can put up a "no guns" sign, but they don't keep us from carrying. Such signs may prohibit people from carrying long guns at the location.

The sign we have to respect is the 30.06 sign, quoting that section in the penal code. There's a specific wording it must include.

Several cities used to use 30.06 signs to keep us off public transportation, however the Legislature banned cities from doing so several years ago. In general CHLs can carry on public metro transport systems in Texas.

Fourth, it seems darned strange that the very city that houses our state government would be denying Texans their 2nd amendment rights.

Q: Are there any forms specifically for authorizing an employee with a Texas CHL to carry in your place of business? I'm not being able to find any and I want it to be more official than just typing it up in a word document.

A: As far as I know there are no such official forms. I used to have a letter from Kerrville Independent School District that allowed me to bring firearms into classrooms to teach Hunter Education. It was simply a business letter.

There are a couple of ways to accomplish what you want. First is to give written authorization to each individual employee. Second is to include blanket permission for any employee with a CHL to carry in your employee manual. (Or wherever you have such policies.)

Finally, employees with CHLs can automatically carry in your business unless:

1. You have a policy stating otherwise, or
2. Your business is a place where CHLs can't ordinarily carry, like a racetrack or school.

Q: I am a Texas CHL holder and I will be driving from Texas to New York through states that recognize Texas CHL except for Maryland, New Jersey and New York.

My questions is, how may I obtain permission from these states to carry?

A: You can't.

Under federal law you may transport (locked in a case unloaded in your car trunk) a firearm from a state where you are permitted to possess the firearm to a state where you are permitted to possess the firearm. I believe you have to have a license in New York to possess a firearm, much less a handgun. That could cause you problems.

Massachusetts and New Jersey are two of the most anti-gun states in the U.S., and will not hesitate to lock you up for the most trivial violation. For instance, I believe one of them prohibits possession of hollow point bullets.

I personally wouldn't take a gun into any of these three states. For more information get a copy of Travelers Guide to Firearms Law of the 50 States at <http://www.txchia.org/bookcovers.htm#trg>.

Q: I was told that if a person has their CHL that they are required by law to protect themselves and those around them if a situation occurs... say we're in the bank and an armed robber comes in, would a person with a CHL whom did not draw really be in trouble? My better since tells me that this is untrue but I have yet to find anything to confirm or deny that statement. I know that if a person is licensed in CPR they can get in trouble for failure to render aid, so is a CHL the same thing?

A: No, there is no such requirement for a CHL. Nor do I believe there is such a requirement for those holding a CPR certification. (And I just renewed my CPR last week.)

There is a Good Samaritan law that says if you reasonably perform CPR you can't be held liable, but that's different.

Further, in your example I would NOT intervene as long as the robbers just wanted to get the money and leave. When things degenerate into a hostage situation, or tying everyone up, then they're threatening people and I'll reconsider.

Regardless, you are never under any legal obligation to protect other people.

One Citizen Who Did the Right Thing

By
Chris Bird

Twenty-four-year-old Zamudio was not supposed to be anywhere near the Safeway grocery store in Tucson on January 8, 2011. He normally works Monday to Friday at his mother's art gallery, selling paintings and delivering them to customers. Saturday was supposed to be his day off but his mother asked him to come in to the gallery to help her with a special event. He and his mother finished breakfast at a nearby bakery about 10 a.m.

He got into his truck and drove across the shopping center parking lot to the Walgreen's drug store next to the Safeway. As usual, he was accompanied by his dog Buddy, a black Labrador mix, and as usual he had his gun, a Ruger P-95 semi-automatic, in an inside jacket pocket. As usual the fifteen-round magazine had only about eight rounds in it.

"I don't keep my clips (magazines) fully loaded," Zamudio said.

What was not usual was that he had a round in the chamber. Usually, when he puts the gun in his pocket in the morning, he will put the magazine in but does not rack the slide to put a round in the chamber.

"That morning, who knows why, I chambered a round," he said.

Zamudio is left-handed so carries the gun in his right-hand inside coat pocket for a cross draw.

He parked and leaving Buddy in the truck, he walked towards the entrance of the drug store. He intended to buy a pack of cigarettes, and that too was odd. He said he had bought a pack the evening before and had smoked only one. Normally his cigarettes go everywhere with him but on this day he had left the smokes at home so he needed to buy more.

As he walked towards Walgreens, he noticed a crowd of people around a table in front of the Safeway. Although he didn't know it at the time, it was an outreach event where Congresswoman Gabrielle Giffords was meeting with constituents.

"I thought I wonder what's going on," Zamudio said.

He decided to get his cigarettes first then see what had attracted the crowd.

"That decision is the hardest one for me because I feel like if I hadn't gone into the store first and I had gone down there, then I would have been in a better position maybe to stop him sooner," Zamudio reflected.

He went into the store and got his cigarettes. He had swiped his debit card to pay for them but hadn't finished the transaction when he heard the shots. There was a burst of them, fired very fast, too fast for accurate shooting, he said.

"He was shooting at a pile of people. They had nowhere to move: there was a wall behind them, columns in front, they were penned in there. It was literally like shooting fish in a barrel. He didn't have to aim, that's why he was able to hurt so many people so fast."

Zamudio realized immediately that what he was hearing was gunfire. He ran out through the door of Walgreens, heading for the sound of the shooting.

"I know when I came through the doorway, I had my hand on my gun and the safety was off," he said. He did not draw his gun.

A man outside the door was shouting: "Shooter, shooter, get down." Zamudio ran past him towards the group of people.

"This is where it really got scary," he said.

He saw an older man getting up off the ground with a gun in his hand. He could see an extended magazine protruding from the bottom of the gun. Hall did not go outside because she didn't know if there were

“Luckily, I saw that the slide was locked open.”

He realized that the gun would not fire in that condition so he did not draw his own gun.

“I’m still moving and it’s still pretty intense. I’ve got my hand on my gun, I’m like scared, all these people are hurting, screaming already, crying. The man who’s holding the guy on the ground is all bloody. That was the first person I saw all bloody.

“It becomes crystal clear: somebody just shot a bunch of people and I see this guy holding a gun so I think that he’s the shooter,” Zamudio said.

He heard the man holding the gun say: “I’ll kill you, you mother-----, I’ll kill you.”

“The problem for me is, as an outside responder who didn’t see the shooter shoot people, I see a guy holding a gun and a bunch of people shot so I thought I need to shoot him. But I saw he couldn’t shoot me and in that split second I decided I didn’t have to, so I didn’t.”

Zamudio charged the man and grabbed the gun twisting it away from himself and towards the man holding it. Zamudio pushed the older man up against the wall and told him to drop the gun. At that point, seventy-four-year-old Bill Badger who was holding the shooter on the ground and Patricia Maisch, sixty-one, who was helping him, yelled at Zamudio that the man he was holding was not the shooter. The young man being held down by Badger and Maisch was the gunman.

Initially Zamudio was suspicious of what he was being told but then realized Badger and Maisch were telling him the truth. However, he was not going to allow the older man to keep holding the gun.

Zamudio told the man: “Just drop it, put it on the ground. Make us feel safe; nobody feels safe right now.”

The man let go of the gun, a Glock Model 19, and it fell to the ground. Zamudio told him to put his foot on it. Zamudio said he never did find out the name of the older man holding the gun.

Zamudio then helped Badger, a retired Army National Guard colonel, hold the suspect down until the police arrived. Relieved by Zamudio of holding the suspect down, Maisch ran into the grocery store and grabbed a handful of paper towels to tend to Badger who was bleeding from a head wound. Earlier she had wrestled a full magazine away from the suspect as he was trying to reload.

When the police arrived they arrested twenty-two-year-old Jared Lee Loughner. He was later charged with murdering six people, including federal District Judge John Roll and nine-year-old Christina Taylor Green, and wounding fourteen, including Badger. Representative Giffords, who apparently was the target of the shooter, was shot through the brain but survived.

As the only person other than the shooter who had a gun at the scene, Zamudio showed admirable restraint and judgment. He is aware that if the slide on the Glock had not been locked back he might have drawn his own gun and shot the wrong man.

I asked him why he ran to the sound of gunfire. This was his response: “I didn’t think about it – it was a reaction. I believe now, when I think about it, that having the gun and being comfortable and familiar with it gave me a giant confidence boost, to be able in that situation to do something appropriate. I know that I am very comfortable carrying a gun all the time and I feel responsible to help people in my daily life, with or without a gun. I always hold doors for ladies and I always stop and help somebody with a flat tire. I’m like a nice guy, I always help people. I think that my natural nature to want to help and to protect plus the confidence of knowing if there is a shooter out there shooting people, I can stop him.”

Joe Zamudio learned to shoot from his father, a Vietnam veteran who worked for the prison service. Although his father and mother split up when he was two, he maintained a good relationship with his father while living with his mother, he said. His father was seriously injured in a motorcycle accident and could not get around much after that. One thing he and his father could share was shooting, Zamudio said.

Since the shooting, Zamudio said he always carries his gun with a round in the chamber.

“There would never be time to chamber one,” he said. “You don’t have that extra second.”

Snub-nosed Revolver & Knife Classes at San Antonio

Chris Bird

Michael de Bethencourt of Northeastern Tactical Schools is putting on a two-day class on snub-nosed revolvers or snubs as they are called. The class is scheduled for Saturday and Sunday, October 7 and 8, at Bexar Community Shooting Range a few miles east of San Antonio. On Friday, October 6, he will hold a day-long class on using folding knives for defense.

De Bethencourt is probably the best nationally recognized expert on the use of the short-barreled revolver. He has been teaching gun, knife and other self-defense tactics to police officers and qualified civilians for 20 years.

Some years ago, he noticed that many of the police officers he was teaching would come to his handgun courses with their double-column magazine equipped semi-automatics. However, when the course ended they would pack away their high-capacity pistols and strap on a Colt Detective Special or Smith & Wesson J-frame revolver. He decided that there was a need for training with the short-barreled revolver. He developed a course and has been teaching it ever since.

As many law enforcement officers and armed civilians carry a snub revolver as a primary or secondary firearm, this is an unparalleled opportunity to learn more about these little guns.

A CHL Guide to Flash Mob Violence: The Newest “Meet and Beat” Threat

By: Austin Davis, President Kangaroo Carry, L.L.C.

As a rule, I am not very good at forecasting the future. Heck, I thought Y2K was going to be utter chaos and still have the propane TV/DVD combo ready to go when the power went! But Flash Mob violence is here as a trend and is a growing threat that you might want to actively prepare and know how to protect yourself and your family.

“OK What is a Flash Mob?”

A Flash Mob is a group typically organized through a series of text messages, tweets, or Facebook posts so these events are unexpected and often uncontrollable. The lack of police presence or knowledge is typically not a problem when synchronized dancing teens break out at a university or mall with entertaining, yet whimsical, group effect, but Flash Crime Mobs are a bit different.

Everything that can be used to organize charity or fun can also be used for crime...especially social media. The rise of the flash mob has turned into a vehicle for looting and violence most visible recently in the UK riots. Flash Mob crime brings a random cast of bad actors into a unified group action. A frightening and growing trend.

As reported by Reuters in a survey done by a US industry group, flash mob crime is on the rise and its rise is due to a spike in technology. According to the survey, "Of 129 retailers, primarily national store chains, surveyed this spring by the National Retail Federation, 94.5 percent said they were victimized by organized criminals in the past year. And 84.8 percent said the problem has only worsened in the past three years". It's important to note that the high percentages aren't entirely due to flash mob crime, but they are certainly contributing as well as increasing.

As a CHL holder in the middle of this new and growing threat you are most likely going to be the first responder responsible for getting you and yours out of the calamity zone. With this dangerous growing social media threat comes special challenges in the standard tactical trilogy; equipment, training and tactics for dealing with escaping the mob. “Escape” is the key word, not stop, arrest or discussions with the participants.

Equipment:

To get free there are some gear choices that might make the difference between clean escape and caught in a hard place.

A video equipped smart phone: Use the video feature to document the scene as validation for any defensive action you might have to take in getting out of the crowd. Use the texting feature in place of voice line in a crisis sometimes as it may be the only way to push your message out past crowded cell towers in a crisis. Your phone can help you guide First Responders as to where the trouble is and where it is spreading plus necessary to get help if you are forced to use lethal force. You might want to look into a service called <http://gik.com/> so if you shoot video it can go in a cloud to a safe off site location if your smart phone is lost, destroyed, or confiscated.

Flashlight: In the land of the blind the one-eyed man is King. We have to see threats to evaluate means, motive and opportunity of the bad actors. Often that means additional light. If you need additional light in an indoor or outdoor setting, a defensive flashlight is a must. I like the current style of compact LED with single lithium battery as easy to carry with plenty of light to navigate, locate, and deal with the situation at hand. The Sure Fire Back-Up is my current favorite example though there are many other fine brands out there as well. Think of a tactical flashlight as a force multiplier in low light settings. Better to have a light and not need it than need it and not have it.

Tactical folding knife: In a crowded close in situation I would feel far more comfortable dealing with a close threat with my folding Emerson Karambit or my Spyderco Endura. My Karambit has low over penetration risk in an environment where odds are most of my threat will be close and the environment fluid.

Firearm: Here is a situation where you might find an advantage in a higher capacity firearm. However, please know we are responsible for every round fired and in an crowded chaotic event launching your "blast all day high cap zombie slayer" with innocents as your backstop may not be well advised on many levels. Please also realize if and when you pull out your handgun, you run a real risk of being shot by First Responders, Bad Guys, as well as hitting innocents in the background. I am not saying there are not legal and valid situations that might require you to use your CHL and pistol, but be forewarned all gun fights are confusing. And in a wild crowd scene will definitely hold additional problems! If you start running around in a jacked up crowd with a gun in your hand it might lead to some bad consequences--- so please think and act accordingly.

Back up gun: Can either be used if you lose your primary weapon or you can give the back up to family member who knows how to use a gun but forgot the first rule of a gun fight that day: "Bring a Gun"!

Training:

In a crisis we seldom rise to the level of our expectations. More often we fail at the limits of our training. Take time to pre-load a plan and train to some level of excellence.

- 1) Practice with your smart phone so you don't have to think to start, store and upload off site your video record of the event.
- 2) Play "what if?" games with yourself and your family. In the middle of a dynamic, violent encounter is not the time to figure out who is best to put in charge and who should follow. This is especially true with Husband/Wife teams in relation to the kids.
- 3) Always be aware of your escape options when in public so you can run from trouble--- not move deeper into danger.

Tactics:

The Bad Actors pick all the good parts of the crime. They pick the targets, place, and time. All we control is the amount of opportunity we present. We have only three tactical choices in any dynamic situation: Fight, Flight, or Freeze.

1) Freeze: Sometimes this is a valid strategy, though freezing is usually the result of the brain shutting down due to the overriding error message of "I can't believe this is happening to me!" ---an all too natural state of mind. Fear causes hesitation and hesitation causes your worse fear to become a reality. The best way to deal with fear and the paralysis is to do something, do anything to break the inertia holding you and yours in the middle of the threat zone. Or, at least let others in your group make a dash for safety, so please see #2.

2) Flight: I LOVE this option! But first determine what direction improves your odds. Run from danger and towards safety. You can only flight as fast as your slowest team member, so please see #3.

3) Fight: You should only fight when the cost of compliance is too high. Decide before hand just who and what you will and will not risk for your life, freedom, and net worth. Do not think that a chaotic event removes you from later legal scrutiny of your actions and assume your actions and words will be captured by some camera in the melee. My code is only fight for people, not property. Figure out when you are out and about just who in your circle of family and friends gets protected and who gets left to deal with the situation on their own, so please see #1.

Hopefully the world will become one big ball of love and violent Flash Mobs we have seen in the UK and here in the USA generated off social media will just go out of fashion like the leisure suit or mood ring. Smart money though would wager that this threat is going to grow and the chances of you or a loved one facing it in the near future increases every day. The current national economic changes coming up will most likely increase the "meet and beat" reality of Flash Mob violence. As always the best advice rides with "hope for the best, plan for the worse, and usually it all works out in the end".

So we got the parking lot bill; now what? by Larry Arnold

As I noted in the Legislative Report Senators Glenn Hegar and Brian Birdwell sponsored SB 321, Relating to an employee's transportation and storage of certain firearms or ammunition while on certain property owned or controlled by the employee's employer.

The bill prohibits employers from having policies that keep employees from securing legally-owned firearms in private vehicles in the employer's parking lot. It also provides protection for the employer, who generally cannot be held liable for any problems the firearms are involved in. (To read it for yourself-which I highly recommend-use the link on the TCHA Legislative Report page at <http://www.txchia.org/legistex11.htm>.)

Sound simple? It isn't.

First, according to the DPS "New Laws" press release, "Employers may not prohibit employees with a concealed handgun license from having firearms or ammunition in their personal cars in the employer's parking lot." That isn't what Sen. Hegar thinks he wrote, but DPS may not be the only ones to interpret the law that way. (As Alan Korwin warned.)

Second, we're also getting inquiries from employees who say their bosses aren't changing company employment policies. Alice Tripp has asked that any employee encountering company policies like this send them to her at ag-tripp@aol.com. Whatever she has planned, employers won't want to be on her wrong side.

We're also getting inquiries asking if it's now "legal" to have a firearm in a company parking lot. The problem here is a misunderstanding of just what SB 321 modified. It was never "illegal" (as in against a provision of the Penal Code or Labor Code) to have a gun in a company parking lot, unless your employer posted a 30.06 sign. The law used to say that employers could have a company policy that prohibited employees from having firearms on company property, including a parking lot the company owned or managed. Violation of that policy could get you fired, but not arrested.

And here may be the real rub. SB 321 says your employer can't fire you for securing a firearm in your car in the company parking lot. But under Texas law employment is "at-will" meaning your employer doesn't need a reason to fire you. So it could turn into a case of, "You're fired, but it isn't because we found a gun in your car."

So where does that leave you? Well, it wouldn't seem very smart to stomp into your CEO's office and let loose with "You stupid (expletive deleted). Get this policy out of the (expletive deleted) employee manual or I'll sue your (expletive deleted)." That wouldn't be in the spirit of non-violent conflict resolution.

If your employer makes a point of announcing that firearms are still banned, let Alice know. Then you have to make a decision whether to ignore the policy, or politely try to get it modified.

If you do get terminated, check with a lawyer. A lawsuit is an expensive and time-consuming way to handle disputes, but it may be the only tool available.

In the long run, of course, I expect the problem to mostly go away. Bosses are hearing a lot of the same anti-gun BS they got back in 1995, when CHL was new. "OMG! Guns in cars! They'll shoot each other! They'll blow up! They'll cause employees to go postal!" It will take about six months for most employers to figure out allowing their employees to secure firearms in private autos isn't going to cause any more problems than concealed carry customers did.

But for some of us, it might be an interesting six months.

As a member of the Texas Concealed Handgun Association, I hereby promise to promote the continuation and improvement of the Texas Concealed Handgun Laws, to present the standards and concerns of the members to the general public, the Department of Public Safety and the legislators who represent us. I further promise to promote responsible firearm safety, ownership and use in our communities, to provide current information to our members about the laws, lesson plans and topics related to the Concealed Handgun License program, and to promote high standards of instruction and training. I will support the right of responsible, law abiding citizens to own, keep and lawfully carry firearms for personal protection.

Enclosed are my dues for membership in the Association. If you are a Texas CHL Instructor please submit a copy of your Texas CHL Instructor Certificate with this application.

Got a new holster for “shorty”, my XD sub-compact .40 cal. by Schwenk. It’s just like the original only it has a back lip that keeps the gun away from your skin. And with the “hot” weather we’ve had, it does make it better. He keeps cranking them out and man, do I love them. Send him an e-mail with your gun specs and he’ll make one just for your gun. And the price is always right. Contact: g.schwenk@yahoo.com

On another note, we have the next meeting scheduled for Oct. 29th In Salado. If you haven’t been attending, you’re really missing some good times. Dean, our booze enthusiast in the field, always manages to bring some exotic bottle with a strange name on it. A few years ago on a hunt we drank one of his “finds” and the next morning I woke up handcuffed to a bull. This last time in Salado he gave me something that closed one of my eyes, hunched my back and made me walk sideways. Like I say, you’ve gotta try and make it.

Tx DPS Announces New Renewal Process for CHL Instructors

This fall Texas Concealed Handgun Instructors are in various stages of renewing their instructor credentials. Some have completed their online application, others have taken the online exam, many have done both, and yet others are waiting. Everyone has been waiting to be told the details of how, with the new online renewal process in place, instructors will go about qualifying on a shooting range.

Soon all DPS-certified Texas Concealed Handgun Instructors will receive a packet of information with the detailed answer to this question and more. However, the really good news is that beginning with this year's 2011 renewal group, instructors will demonstrate range proficiency every other renewal. This means renewing instructors in good standing will not be required to demonstrate handgun proficiency this year. The few who might be required to demonstrate proficiency have recently lapsed credentials. They will be notified separately.

All questions about future range qualifications will be answered with materials in the packets. Don't fret.

Texas Instructors, get your online business taken care of.

DPS has two classes scheduled in October to certify new instructors as the program continues to grow. We currently have 2,680 active CHL instructors and 505,208 active Texas licensees.
